In a div I create some divs, from which I create a Javascript object. From this, I need to get a reference of the div. Now, I need to put a text into the div. I can do it by putting the text in a input, but then the input object is "created" twice - once in the div and once in the input. I tried calling something like document.getElementById("myDiv").innerHTML, but that gave me an error. Now, I can create a div, put the text inside, and then remove it from the object, but then it's not referenced anymore. At a low level, I see that all objects are added to the DOM tree, then it's removed from there, then it's put again in the DOM tree, but that seems very wasteful. What should I do, so I can add to the object as it's put in the DOM tree, not then have a bunch of useless garbage when I remove the elements? A: I think you're being used to a very specific language/paradigm. In JavaScript, variables are not created, they are references to objects/elements. In other words, each variable reference you use is getting a new DOM object, but it is still attached to a unique variable, so you don't have to worry about over-using it. You will have an object reference of some kind: var div = document.getElementById("myDiv"); var ref = div.innerHTML; div.innerHTML = "hello world"; document.getElementById("myDiv").innerHTML = ref; You would probably not need 3da54e8ca3
