The use of marine vessels for transporting goods, including the movement of empty, semi-trailer trucks, has become increasingly important because these vessels minimize the amount of labor necessary to transport goods. Many existing vessels, particularly those used in the inland and coastal waterways, have an underbelly or cargo-carrying bed which is hydraulically elevated above the top of the vessel. This type of arrangement is useful when the vessel is transporting a flat cargo which can be loaded on and off the vessel through the cargo-carrying bed. I want to post a subscription and a one time payment that are applied to my account at once. There are settings for each payment, and a one time payment removes that setting. However, Postpayments for Paypal will delay the subscription setting until the next login. How can I create a payment for this client? A: We've got an example of a subscription validator here that's been converted to Stripe and works very similarly to what you're describing, including this: you can use PostPayments for Paypal or PayPal directly. This is the button that appears on the donation form itself, which you can then copy/paste and refresh to submit the donation. ===Q: Custom Template for rtmp with video not playing in IE10 I have a custom rtmp template which i have used in an application before on a different website. The video is playing in all browsers including IE9. The problem is that the same template is not working on IE10 with a flash player. I am not sure if the problem is with IE10 browser or my template. The below template is defined on my html as I am calling it from my aspx page using Response.Write("") I can even put html tags around the player like below. Any idea why the same template is not working on IE10 with flash? I am using a flash player embedded on the page. Thanks. A: Got it! I just put a loaded event on the flash object. The loaded event allowed the html page to load and then the video would fire and render. The use of imidazole-labeled polypeptides for determining the proximity of binding sites to binding proteins by 125I-labeling, Edman degradation, and high-pressure liquid chromatographic analysis. An imidazole-labeled synthetic polypeptide was synthesized and employed in the study of the binding of the protein transthyretin to a selected synthetic polyamino acid. Transthyretin binds the selected synthetic polyamino acid in a stoichiometry of 1:2 and exhibits high affinity for the binding polyamino acid at temperatures between 4 and 25 degrees C. The synthetic polyamino acid was derivatized with the fluorescent indicator imidazole so that a relationship could be established between the binding constants of the protein and the binding constant of the synthetic polyamino acid. Both natural and synthetic binding polyamino acids containing a single or multiple imidazole ligands were labeled with 125I

(Newser) – A 14-year-old girl claims she was threatened with rape by a teen wearing a Girl Scout uniform—and the family says her attacker was also wearing a badge. The Greensboro News & Record reports that last week the high schooler accused of the nearly two-year old threat put a knife to the girl's back and told her he would "stick a finger" in her mouth if she told anyone. Police say an arrest warrant has been issued for the teen, who's a member of Troop 50 in Greensboro, N.C. The 16-year-old she told was threatening her with rape in 2008, and she is now 17. The family says they're not nervous to let the girl prosecute, which she has declined.In need of an upgrade. Here is an older Gibson system that was assembled in late '73.
