Ontrack EasyRecovery Professional V6.10.07 Utorrent.Our goal is to identify the bioelectric signals that give rise to the beta frequency oscillations seen in hippocampal GABA cells and to determine if the period and phase of these oscillations are altered in the absence of inhibitory synaptic inputs. Epilepsy, sleep, and learning all involve alterations in the ability of brain circuits to generate and propagate oscillations. Some forms of epilepsy can be initiated by synchronous activation of a small group of inhibitory interneurons, and these cells are generally thought to maintain a self-inhibition that prevents them from generating gamma frequency oscillations. A better understanding of how inhibitory synapses influence these oscillations may improve understanding of epileptic seizures and the sleep state. Insulators that are specifically expressed in GABA cells and long-range axons of these cells have the potential to couple distant GABA cells together to alter oscillations that occur in individual GABA cells. Our experiments will use our in vitro whole-cell recording techniques to determine if these insulators play a role in bi-directional signaling between GABA cells and control the period and phase of gamma frequency oscillations. We will determine if GABA cells regulate the activity of other GABA cells and/or non-GABA neurons with different synapses, e.g. if signals that inhibit a GABA cell also excite a distant GABA cell, and whether GABA cells e79caf774b
