How many users is "too many" for a private network? When designing a LAN between one or more companies, what number of users would you say is "too many" to not be able to support all of the users? If you don't know what number of users is too many, how many would be a "reasonable" number? I'm trying to determine what it's like to be in a situation where you can't support everything you need, and what things you may want to consider in your network design. A: One rule of thumb is that you won't be able to support the users you have, plus half of the users you want. If you have 10 users, then you may be able to support 10-12 users, but you won't be able to support more than 20 users. If you have 100 users, then you will be able to support 20-30 users. You will probably want to have more than this in any case, to provide for growth. A: Depends on how technically competent and disciplined your users are, and how much you want to spend. You need to compare how much of a maintenance headache it is to manage 20 users with a competent administrator, versus 60 users. The fewer the users that you have the more realistic the cost of managing them will be. If the people that will be supporting your network the most are your users, then of course you won't want to get to more than a handful of users and it shouldn't be a problem. If your users are mostly computer enthusiasts then it's most likely that you'll want to support much more than 20 users. A few generalities I can offer based on experience: If the users are not capable of dealing with their own network problems, then don't expect them to have good support. If the users can be trusted to be responsible, then you don't need to put a lot of effort into making it easy to setup and administer. If the support resources are more important than the capabilities of the user base, then you will need a lot of users. If the users are more

Hydrazinecarboxamides are known as useful intermediates for preparing herbicidal herbicidal compounds of Formula 1 (and Equivalent Formulae) wherein: X1 is O or S; R1 is H or CH3; R2 is O or S, and R3 is H or C1-4-alkyl, by allowing an amide derivative of Formula 2 to react with an isocyanate of Formula 3 under conditions allowing a cyclization reaction to occur. The formation of hydrazinecarboxamide derivatives from hydrazines and isocyanates is well known. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 3,145,158 discloses the reaction of a hydrazide derivative with a cyanate. Similarly, U.S. Pat. Nos. 3,894,028 and 4,002,663 disclose the reaction of a hydrazide with a cyanate of a hydrazinecarboxamide. In U.S. Pat. No. 4,002,663, the hydrazinecarboxamide is formed via a halogen-azide intermediate. U.S. Pat. 6d1f23a050
